New Members ✓

Please provide the name of the person who recruited you to ECA so we can acknowledge their membership recruitment efforts:

The Eastern Communication Association was initially established in 1910 and continues as the oldest professional communication association in the United States. As a distinguished service-oriented organization with a history of achievement in research, criticism, communication theory, and excellence in teaching, the association welcomes members who share the goals and objectives of a membership dedicated to participation in state, regional, and national activity. Special features of membership in the Eastern Communication Association include a subscription to three scholarly Journals: Communication Quarterly, Communication Research Reports, and Qualitative Research Reports in Communication; the "Scholars Program" distinguished members who are available for consultation; an annual regional convention of high quality programming; and the current ECA News through E-Bulletins. Membership in the Eastern Communication Association also presents the opportunity for active participation in selected interest groups, free placement service at conventions, the dissemination of valuable information reports, and research projects related to professional communication. Membership is open to professionals from colleges/universities, elementary and secondary schools, business, undergraduate and graduate students, industry, community colleges, families, management, institutions libraries and other communication related fields of study.
