

Dr. Sonia Alemagno serves as the Dean of the Kent State University College of Public Health and Health Sciences. She joined Kent State University in 2009 to assist in the development of the new College of Public Health. She also serves as a Professor of Health Policy and Management, mentoring doctoral students. Her research has been funded with over $20 million dollars over the past 20 years, with a focus on public health services for homeless families and incarcerated youth and women. She serves on numerous boards and professional associations. Most recently, she developed the community health worker and community health worker supervisor certificate offered as for-credit programs in the College of Public Health and Health Sciences. She also serves as the director of the Mobile Flashes program, an outreach program of the College.
