As Ash Brokerage's National Director of Practice Management, Paul Kingsman works directly with financial advisors. He helps them focus on what matters most, gain control of their business and succeed sooner.

Paul is a sought-after expert on being distraction-proof. He trained for 13 years to swim a two-minute backstroke event at the Olympic Games, and won the bronze medal by only four one-hundredths of a second.

He has worked in the financial services industry since 2001. During that time, he's spoken to many advisor groups and coached a number of them individually. Most recently he was with a wealth management firm in the San Francisco Bay Area.

As an Olympic medalist, he knows best principals and processes to succeed in a highly competitive environment. As a former financial advisor, he understands what works in the real world, teaching practical, actionable solutions to advisors' everyday challenges.

The achievements Paul is most proud of include being married for 30 years, a dad for 25 years, a Masters of Theological Studies degree from Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary and a jail chaplain for 16 years.
