

Do you know how the EPA defines a

this year?

Strangely enough, the EPA's definition of a leak has changed several times in the past ten years. Next year's definition may be different from this year's. And the definition you don't know can hurt you. It can cost you a bundle in fines and downtime.

The solution? Deal with an independent fluid sealing distributor. We make it our business to stay current with the maze of rules and regs that the EPA and OSHA have written – and rewritten – just for you. For a free Fluid Sealing Analysis, just give us a call at the number below.
