

Amber Clough, Johns Hopkins University School of Nursing

Amber Clough is a Research Program Manager for Gender-Based Violence (GBV) Projects at Johns Hopkins University School of Nursing.

She has nearly 20 years of advocacy and research experience with GBV survivors. She has implemented an array of community, campus, and clinic-based intervention and evaluation projects to prevent and respond to intimate partner violence and its consequences globally, including in extremely low resources settings such as Somalia and South Sudan.

Her expertise is in trauma-informed research protocols, maximizing retention in longitudinal studies, as well as leveraging technology to deliver interventions to survivors.
